my words about Dr. Frost’s article Refugees are more stressed out than the general population—training social workers how to teach mindfulness looks like a nice fit in the practice.

article quote
“According to a report published by the Surgeon General of the United States, minority populations are less likely to have access to mental health care and are more likely to have unmet mental health care needs.”

Dr. Caren Frost
PhD Anthropology
Research Professor, College of Social Work

“research is not conducted in a vacuum—interdisciplinary work is critical for successful, applied research projects that address real-world problems and provide appropriate solutions for the issues of today.”

my words about the related article Refugees don’t experience traumatic stress once, but many times over and over.

article quote
“...refugees experience diverse stressors that accumulate over the preflight, flight, exile, and resettlement/repatriation periods. Despite the historical focus on the acute stressors of war, the enduring contextual postmigration stress that refugees face—including marginalization, socioeconomic disadvantage, acculturation difficulties, loss of social support, and “cultural bereavement”—must be recognized.”
